Laura Loves: Laura Bailey's Weekly Edit

by LAURA BAILEY

Monday 18 June 2018

Each week, model, photographer and Vogue contributing editor Laura Bailey shares her most-loved things of the moment - from her everyday skin saviours, to the wardrobe staple to shop now (and to pack for holiday) and the London play not to miss. Delve into her picks of the week, below.

Wear

A white sundress. Having recently given most of my wardrobe away (I can breathe again), I have reconnected with what I actually need and want to wear, especially when travelling. No more carnival piles of vintage flower print, ragged bikinis and almost identical pairs of dungarees. I've decided that a swimsuit (Les Boys Les Girls), a pair of shorts and a white sundress are the basic ingredients of a weekend - or month - away. (Plus a straw hat, an armful of bangles and a denim shirt). I love last year's off-the-shoulder Isa Arfen cotton dress with a sash, which crisscrossed Europe with me as a get-out-of-trouble beach to party look. (This year's versions are now on sale at Matchesfashion.com).

And Zimmerman's Iris dress and the Farrah by Isabelle Fox (ethically handmade in London) are new white dress crushes. (Okay, they all also make versions of the perfect little black dress but that's a different story). June is prime time to snap up a high-street bargain in the sale - River Island is worth a speedy white sundress cruise, and I can't resist the racks of vintage cotton nighties in my favourite local charity shops (my forever favourites cost less than £20 and I don't just wear them to bed...)
